3 Who benefits the most

Legal Departments.
Who communicate a lot internally, with other departments and do a lot of negotiation work.

Other Departments:
Procurement, Sales, Finance, IT. They have a lot of document-centric work that requires collaboration and approvals both inside the company and outside.

Law Firms.
With multiple practices and offices across the States and worldwide. With focus on the best legal services delivery.

4 Where it helps the most

To negotiate a large M&A transaction with 6 teams involved (2 parties and their legal and financial advisors). To be able to track back the history of every decision made.

To collaborate on internal corporate policy and to approve it with tax, finance, legal and commercial departments.

To initiate a regular supply contract in procurement dept., approved it with legal and agree on it with the supplier.

5 How it helps

Don't waste time switching between the draft, emails and messengers.

See the discussion, not overlapping comments bubbles.

Read the comments and edit directly next to them.

Communicate clearly, with full context and confidence.

Get full context—see both internal and external discussions.

Manage what internal and external teams see and edit.

Avoid sending wrong messages to wrong people.

Enjoy automatic versions control.

Can we set payments to Net 30 so that we wouldn't need extra approvals for this?

Megan Adams
Let me check with my team.

Megan Adams
Hey, Chris, can we make it Net 30? We'll wait for approvals forever otherwise.

Christian Kang
Sure, no problem

Megan Adams
That's fine. Agreed.
